REJECTIONISM

A Workbook for Knowing Yourself by What You Refuse

Ashly Lorenzana

REJECTIONISM AS A WORLDVIEW

At its core, Rejectionism isn't nihilism, pessimism, or contrarianism. It's a philosophy that treats rejection as an epistemic act—a way of knowing.

> I know who I am by what I refuse to accept, perform, excuse, or reproduce.

Where most systems ask:

- What do you want?
- What are your goals?
- What do you believe in?

Rejectionism asks:

- What will you not consent to?
- What stories do you refuse to repeat?
- Which structures lose legitimacy the moment you opt out?

What Rejectionism is not

❌ Not cynicism

❌ Not indecision

❌ Not bitterness

❌ Not passive avoidance

Rejectionism is active refusal with moral and psychological clarity.

CORE PRINCIPLES

1. REFUSAL IS SUFFICIENT

You do not need a replacement belief, goal, or identity to justify a rejection.

> No is a complete sentence philosophically, not just socially.

2. NON-PARTICIPATION IS AGENCY

Choosing not to:

- ☐ reproduce
- ☐ forgive
- ☐ reconcile
- ☐ aspire
- ☐ optimize
- ☐ redeem

...is not a failure of imagination. It is a boundary.

3. NARRATIVES ARE SUSPECT

If a story demands:

- ☐ redemption
- ☐ growth arcs
- ☐ gratitude
- ☐ closure
- ☐ forgiveness

...Rejectionism asks: who benefits from this demand?

4. IDENTITY BY NEGATION

You are not defined by:

- what you chase
- what you accumulate
- what you become

You are defined by what you consistently decline.

5. AMBIVALENCE IS INTELLIGENCE

Rejectionism refuses forced resolution.

Not choosing yet is not weakness—it's often accuracy.

REJECTIONISM EXERCISES

This workbook does not help you become a better version of yourself.

It helps you stop pretending to want what you don't.

- You may skip sections.
- You may leave answers blank.
- You are not expected to "resolve" anything.

Discomfort is data.

Refusal does not require justification.

If you feel pressure to turn these pages into progress, pause.

That pressure is part of what this workbook exists to expose.

THE RIGHT TO REFUSE

1. THE MYTH OF REPLACEMENT

Premise:

You are not required to replace what you reject.

Prompts:

Something I was expected to replace immediately after rejecting it:

Who benefited from me finding a substitute?

What broke when I didn’t replace it?

Exercise:

List 5 things you rejected without a replacement.

Notice which ones still get questioned.

2. NO AS A COMPLETE PHILOSOPHY

What “no” in your life feels final?

Which “no” keeps being treated as temporary by others?

What would collapse if that “no” were taken seriously?

You do not owe curiosity about paths you already declined.

IDENTITY BY NEGATION

3. WHO YOU ARE NOT

Complete without softening:

I am not someone who...

I refuse to become...

I will not be remembered as...

Circle the lines that feel relieving rather than sad.

4. THE COST OF PRETENDING

Roles you've played to avoid conflict:

Beliefs you've pretended to hold:

Futures you've nodded along to:

For each:

What did pretending cost me?

What did it protect me from?

NARRATIVES YOU REJECT

5. STORIES YOU DO NOT CONSENT TO

Check any that apply (add your own):

- ☐ Redemption arcs
- ☐ Everything-happens-for-a-reason
- ☐ Growth-through-suffering
- ☐ Forgiveness-as-healing
- ☐ Closure
- ☐ Gratitude for harm

Choose one and answer:

Who taught me this story?

Who does it silence?

What happens if I don't perform it?

6. THE REFUSAL TO REFRAME

Write about something without:

- ☐ finding meaning
- ☐ extracting a lesson
- ☐ locating silver linings

Stop when you feel the urge to justify.

That urge is the point.

AMBIVALENCE AS INTELLIGENCE

7. STAYING UNDECIDED

Decisions you've delayed on purpose:

What indecision has protected:

What clarity would force you to do:

Some choices stay open because closing them would be dishonest.

8. THE PRESSURE TO CHOOSE

Who benefits from you choosing?

Who gets uncomfortable when you don't?

What language is used to rush you?

Underline words like:

stuck, afraid, immature, wasting time

SOCIAL CONTRACTS YOU NEVER SIGNED

9. INVISIBLE AGREEMENTS

List expectations you're assumed to accept:

- ☐ Emotional labor
- ☐ Availability
- ☐ Optimism
- ☐ Reproduction
- ☐ Forgiveness
- ☐ Aspiration
- ☐ "Moving on"

For each:

Did I ever explicitly agree to this?

10. OPTING OUT WITHOUT EXPLANATION

Write responses you're allowed to give:

"No."

"I'm not participating in that."

"That doesn't apply to me."

"I don't want this explained."

Practice not elaborating.

REJECTION AS MORAL POSITION

11. WHAT YOU WILL NOT ENDORSE

Systems you refuse to legitimize:

Traditions you won't romanticize:

Harm you won't excuse as "complex":

This is not extremism.

It's boundary-setting at scale.

12. LIVING WITHOUT A POSITIVE PROGRAM

Answer honestly:

What scares people about your refusal?

What do they keep asking you to replace it with?

What if you don't?

Rejectionism does not propose a better world.

It refuses to lie about this one.

QUIET CONCLUSIONS

13. WHAT REMAINS

After everything you've rejected:

What still feels true?

What hasn't required effort to maintain?

What would survive even if nothing improved?

Write anything.

Or nothing.

Close the workbook without resolution.

REJECTIONIST APHORISMS

Refusal is not emptiness.

Clarity does not require optimism.

I do not owe coherence to systems that harmed me.

Meaning is optional.

WARNINGS

This workbook may:

- ☐ Reduce tolerance for bullshit
- ☐ Strain relationships built on expectation
- ☐ Make goal-setting frameworks unusable

These are not bugs.
